Original text (Footnote 30)

An ADS that may “suggest” the user takes control (e.g., when approaching the end of its ODD) and that is not designed to require a fallback user to continuously be ready to take control should be considered as a user-initiated system deactivation with regard to the requirements of this section.”

Revised text (two proposals)

- 1) An ADSF-2 that allows a user to take over manual control of the DDT may “suggest” the user to take control of the DDT (e.g., when approaching the end of its ODD). This suggestion shall not be considered a system-initiated deactivation with regard to the requirements of this regulation.
- 2) 'where an ADSF-2 suggests that a user might optionally take control, this shall be considered a user-initiated deactivation if the user accepts the suggestion'
